Moeller School Governance Draws National Interest

CINCINNATI, March 9, 2015 – Archbishop Moeller High School sent a delegation to The First Academy (TFA), a private Christian school in Orlando, Florida. Moeller’s initiative was to teach the faculty and students about Moeller’s governing system called: The House System. The Headmaster at TFA invited the group to speak with school officials and school leaders after nearly a year of correspondence.

Last spring, The Headmaster of TFA visited Moeller. After several additional discussions between the student leaders and administrations at each respective school, TFA invited Moeller to Florida to give a full in-depth presentation on the House System. The Moeller delegation consisted of the Director of the House System, Karen Matuszek, Zehler House Dean, Bruce Nelson, as well as two former School Captains Charlie Fiessinger, class of '11, and Kyle Zimmerman class of '14.

“It was a really neat experience for me to help share the House System,” said Zimmerman, a current Linder Honors Plus student at the University of Cincinnati, “Which has made such an impact on my personal growth and development, with another school where it can be a great asset to helping grow other students into tomorrow’s leaders.”

Moeller’s House System is a form of student governance where students from all grades are divided into six separate groups called Houses to promote comradery, friendship, as well as spiritual and academic growth. The three objectives of Moeller’s House System are to increase pastoral care to each student, allow students opportunities to build strong personal relationships and encourage every student to develop as a leader. The House System is one of the key components of instilling “MoeMentum for Life” in every student. TFA will likely develop and implement their own version of the House System beginning next year.
